Stranger in Your Own Skin

Living From the Neck Up

Is it not a bit of a cosmic irony, we spend 100% of our time inside this body, a living biological organism, yet most of us have not read the manual—and we usually only pay attention when something goes wrong.

Navigating life while being disconnected from our bodies is a common modern paradox. Here is a look at why we do it and how that "disregard" usually manifests.

"Brain on a Stick"

Many of us live almost entirely from the neck up. In a world driven by screens, data, and intellectual labor, the body often becomes nothing more than a vehicle to transport our brains from one activity or app to the next.

- Disconnection

- We largely treat our body with disregard and very little care. We feed it junk, demand it stays awake with caffeine, force it to sit for hours, and then get annoyed when it feels stiff or tired.

- Language Gap

- The body doesn't speak in Afrikaans, English or Xhosa; it communicates in sensations - tightness, warmth, hunger, fatigue. When we ignore the SOS messages our body is sending us, we are essentially 'hanging up' the phone on our own intuition.

Bridging the Divide

Inhabiting Your Own Body

How We Navigate

When we do not "know" our bodies, we rely on external scripts rather than internal signals.

Rediscovering your Body

- Inhabit your body, with consciousness.
- Practice interoception awareness of your body. Interoception awareness is to listen to your body, and become finely attuned to what it is communicating to you. ' "Interoception is the nervous system's capacity to sense and interpret the internal signals of the body. This isn't just about noticing a racing heart or a grumbling stomach. It's about how the brain translates this constant stream of bodily information into meaningful psychological experiences, including emotions, a sense of self, and the capacity for regulation." www.simplypsychology.org/interoception
- Move your body to experience how it feels to stretch or simply breathe; rather than focusing on how it looks in the mirror.
- Your body is not disposable, you cannot simply replace it with a new model.
- View your body as a partner to be consulted, not as a project.
- Respect your body's limits. "I am tired" is a physical fact, not a moral failing.

Your body is an irreplaceable partner, and your most valuable possession.

Long-term health needs consistency—small, intentional acts of care—rather than intense, sporadic efforts.

JAS Foundation Courses

2026 Practitioners Cohort

Trainees completed Module 3 of the JAS Foundation Bowen Practitioner's course, a significant milestone. At this point, trainees start to 'read' the body, and translate theory into practice.

Moving beyond the comfort zone is exactly where the real growth happens, especially when balancing the precision of anatomy with the subtle art of activating the nervous system. Adding new tools to their kit is no small feat.

Coming to grips with the skeletal system

2026 Advance Cohort

In the Advance course, practitioners focus on deepening their learning, practice, and teaching. There is clarity that comes when you have to explain and demonstrate a concept, like the nuance of a move or a bony landmark.

Teaching and mentorship of trainees, give practitioners' the opportunity to refine and consolidate their technique.

Hands of Change

Small Acts, Systemic Impact

Why Your "Bit" Is the Blueprint for Change

"Never doubt that a small group of thoughtful committed citizens can change the world; indeed, it's the only thing that ever has." by Margaret Mead (American, cultural anthropologist)

- Collective Power: "Individually, we are one drop. Together, we are an ocean." By Ryunosuke Satoro (Japanese, poet). Systems only shift when enough individuals change their behaviour. One drop at a time, fills the bucket, so let us get busy filling the bucket, and create a tsunami of positive change in our family, community, and society.

- Mental Agency: 'Leant helplessness' and a sense of hopelessness, keep us trapped in a state of despair, defeat, cynicism and lethargy. We can break out of this cycle by exercising agency; and through individual and collective action. Agency is 'the capacity, condition, or state of acting or of exerting power' to changes our condition in our family, community or society. No one is coming to save us; we are going to have to save ourselves.

- Ripple Effect: Humans mimic those around them. When you act, you provide a social impetus that encourages family, friends, and neighbours to do the same. So let us start moving, one step at a time.

- Momentum: Small wins create the energy needed for large-scale movements. It is easier to keep a moving wheel turning, than to start one from a dead stop.

Contributions comes in many forms,

- time
- energy
- effort
- financial
- presence
- care

In short: You are not meant to carry the world, but you are the one who can manage your corner of it.
